HISTORICAL SKETCH

The history of the Ullrey family contained herein is based on information gathered by correspondence, personal visits, and conversations with descendants of the early progenitors of the family, and such remembrance as the present living members can offer.

The name Ullrey, whether spelled Ullrey, or Ulrey, comes without doubt from the Swiss name Ulrich. Swiss history is full of the name Ulrich, while the name Ullrey, however spelled, does not appear. Even in the history of Germany the nearest to it is Oelreich. The writer remembers that her father said the name came from the word Ulrich. In the many books examined in the Newberry Library were accounts of emigrants who came to this country named Ulrich and went to almost every state in the Union, some retaining the name Ulrich and some changing it to comply with American customs to either Ullrey or Ulrey, whichever seemed easiest to spell. In our own family and in our own county histories the name is spelled in different ways.

On the monument of George Ullrey, the first of our family of whom we have any knowledge, the name is spelled Ullery, while in the cemetery book the name is spelled Ulrey. This monument was examined by Mrs. Charles M. Bucher and her father Isaac Ulrey, who was a descendant of said George Ulrey. They found this monument in Piqua, Ohio, lettered as follows:

"George Ullery, died June 8, 1849, aged 82 years.
His wife, Anne Ullery, died July 11, 1861, aged 98
years, 6 months, 4 days."

Richard V. Hicks, husband of Catherine Ullrey, related to the writer something over fifty years ago how our early ancestor was banished from the old country because of his religious belief, which he was preaching, and marched to the sea-coast where he took ship for this country. The march was so long that his shoes were worn and his feet sore and bleeding when he reached the coast, which implies that he came a long way. Mark Ullrey, son of David H. Ullrey, learns from an old Bible that he took ship from Schleswig Holstein which would be a long march from Wortemburg, but in a direct line to the coast. This story is verified by other members of the family and further verified by the fact that history relates that the Dunkards about that time were persecuted and banished by the governments of some European countries.

How his wife, Anne, got to the seacoast the writer has not been able to discover, but get there she must because Jacob Ullrey, the ancestor of this branch of the family, was born enroute to America, but under the Stars and Stripes, March 19, 1792.

Information from different sources points to their having come to Franklin Co., Pennsylvania, for their son John was born there four years later. In 1809 they came to Ohio and settled on a lease near the site of Dayton, then a small settlement.

After George Ullrey located Indians occasionally roamed the settlement. Mrs. Nancy Ullery Nysewander, descendant of John Ulrey, son of George, relates the following incident: On one occasion two Indians approached the cabin. None of the men were at home. Anne, the wife of George Ullrey, hastened to close the door. The Indians pushed at the door till it opened enough to get their fingers within. She grabbed a nearby axe and hammered their fingers until they let go and left." This incident proves that all the heroism and dauntlessness was not on the male side of the family.

George Ulrey with his family, probably because of the Indians a little later returned to Pennsylvania. The mother and youngest child riding horseback and the others walking. John is said to have been about thirteen years of age. That would make Jacob, our direct ancestor about seventeen. His father, George Ulrey then went to Wortemburg, later a part of the German Empire. So Wortemburg must have been his original home, and it was then a part of Switzerland, or at least not a part of the German Empire till later. He is said to have visited friends and relatives and then returned to America.

Jacob Ullrey, eldest known son of George, came to Shelby Co., Ohio, in 1830 according to a letter by Catherine Ullrey Hicks, a daughter, then seven years old. It is supposed that his father, George Ullrey, came with him for he is buried at Piqua, Ohio, near the home of his son.

Jacob Ullrey was married to Catherine Everhart and lived in Shelby Co., Ohio. Descendants of three of their ten children are members of this association, John, Catherine and Samuel. His character is well illustrated in the story prevalent in a former generation. It is said he came to Michigan from Ohio, walking all the way. It is thought the horses were all busy on his broad acres back home. After spending but a few hours with his son John he indicated his readiness to return home. When importuned to stay longer as he had come a long way, he replied in effect that he had come to see his children here. He had seen them, and they were well and prosperous, and he would now go back home, which he did forthwith and in the same way he had come.

His eldest son John was born in Pennsylvania, and came to Shelby Co., Ohio, with his parents in 1830. In 1835 he came to St. Joseph Co., Indiana, near South Bend, remaining there until 1844 when he moved to Milton Township, Cass, Co., Michigan. From there he moved to Berrien County, continuing in his pursuit of farming. Early in life he united with the Dunkard church.

Christine Ullrey married a farmer and lived in Cass Co. near Edwardsburg her lifetime. Samuel Ullrey was likewise a farmer and lived near Niles, Mich.

While the known children of George Ullrey are given here in the writer feels that mention should be made of Adam Ullrey, who is not known but believed by many to be another and older child of said George Ullrey. This Adam was born but three years earlier than Jacob, and if another child was left in Wortemburg and came to this country later. He married Charlotte Whittier and settled in Miami Co., not far from Piqua, and is buried at Troy, Ohio. He served nine years in the Napoleonic wars, evidently under duress for he was violently opposed to war, and used all his influence against the burning question, the Civil war. He was a Dunkard and deeply religious as were all the early progenitors of the Ullrey family. A clean ancestry is a great blessing, physically and spiritually, to descendants.
